Hooray, you're invited to interview at a top business school.... now what?? The best MBA programs all require an interview before admission. The admissions committee needs to get a first-hand experience with a candidate – or, at least, a second-hand report of such an experience from an alum – in order to have another data point for use in evaluating, and in weeding out, the good from the bad. Yet the array of interview scenarios is incredibly confusing – applicant-initiated interviews, invitation-only interviews, blind interviews – even Skype interviews. What are the best strategies? How do you prepare? This SnarkStrategies Guide will lay it all out for you. The interview can be the make-or-break experience in your bschool application. Make the most of it with EssaySnark!

Exactly what you need to know

By Jen Durelin

I've been following essaysnark's blog for a while, and when I got the interview invite, I knew I needed some extra information. They don't feed you any answers, but they give you the right information to get to those answers yourself. The interview question that I always struggle with-- "Do you have any questions for me?" They had a way for me to think about how to approach that, as well as questions and methods for preparation that I found wonderfully helpful. Now that I've got one admit under my belt, I am very happy to say thank you to essaysnark for all their help.

Essay Snark is the best

By R. Jaluria

You may think you're golden once you get that b-school interview... but it's a lot more competitive than you think it is. Be prepared, save yourself from stupid mistakes, and show them why you should be getting an MBA from their school.

This guide thoroughly helped me in being a prepared interviewee and I am now pursuing my MBA at a fantastic school

Waste of money.

By Karan

Nothing new. Same thing is being told all over again. Save money and browse the internet. you will get better strategies than this book. The price is a rip off as they have copied (not word to word but the crux of it) material available elsewhere
