Useful guide to Tikal

By Bonnie Dickson

I got this guide for a visit to Tikal that we just completed. As we saw each of the temples, complexes, etc. I would read aloud what it had to say. I read it before I went as well. Since I have it on my Kindle it was easy to carry. I wish I had had it before we chose which hotel in the park to reserve.

One thing I would recommend. The author recommends wearing long pants while in the park. Good advice for the times of year when there are lots of mosquitoes. We visited in mid April and were told that few mosquitoes are out then and found that to be true. We did use some repellent. I did not wear long pants. It is very hot and humid and I am very glad I didn't wear long pants - in fact we joked about our "death march" through Tikal. Don't count on using a map from the book as it is a link to another guidebook. Very good maps are available at the park. I had to laugh at the advice about bringing a battery operated fan as power is seldom on in the park hotels. Great if you are able to bring one but how do you bring one in a suitcase on an airplane?

Sunrise at Tikal

By EWright

Tikal is an amazing site and Adam's book is a practical, personal guide as well as a history. He has clearly been there! We opted for a very early (3:45 am departure) guided sunrise tour--which we couldn't have accomplished alone--leaving from Remate. Watching and listening as the jungle awakens, from the top of a temple, is a memorable experience. The book helped us prepare and gave us an appreciation for the site, which is expansive!
